Who are we?

The Post Oil Landscapes collective, is gathering researchers in social sciences (management, geography, philosophy, sociology, political sciences), experts in agronomy and landscape sciences, and professionals of spatial design (architects, landscape architects, urban planners). Located in France, it was officially created in 2015, welcoming new members around the authors of its first book, Post Oil landscapes?, 2013 Ed.. Ritimo.,

What is our philosophy?

We think it essential to restore the status of landscape as playing a significant and major part in planning policies, in the context of energetic transition and more generally of sustainable development.

We think that landscape approach is federative and facilitates the implementation of energy and ecology transition schemes, adapted to each territory. By actualizing landscape art which gave its quality to territories, the Post Oil Landscapes collective wishes to give relevant experiments a chance while explaining and giving access to its know-how.

Which are our priorities of action?

Stakeholders – inhabitants, elected representatives, professionals – are already active in local development experiments whose transitional initiatives should be better known and better explored. We are convinced that collecting these experiments and revealing their methods by analyzing them,, will make successful the application of the landscape approach to enhance planning actions.

Our aim is to foster civic engagement in the design and implementation of post oil landscape plans leveraging the proper resources of each territory.
